THE LONG RESCUE

Geoff loves to hike and climb. In May 2004, he went to Oregon to climb the top of Mt. Hood. He went with his best friend, Marc. They were at 9,400 feet. It was snowy and cold. Suddenly, Geoff fell into a hole called a crevasse. His body hit the sides of the crevasse like a pinball in a pinball machine. Marc called, Geoff? Geoff? But there was not answer. He could not see Geoff. Marc was worried. Was Geoff dead? Marc quickly went down the mountain to get help. Marc saw three men below. They had a cell phone. They called 911. Then the three men went back up the mountain with Marc. They looked into the crevasse and called Geoff’s name. This time Geoff answered. They knew he was alive. One man named Mike went 65 feet down on a rope. He found Geoff at the bottom.

Geoff could not move his legs. He had cut.
His eye was hurt. He had broken bones. He was in pain, but he was happy to see Mike.
Mike put a sleeping bag around him to keep him warm. Two hours later the Portland Mountain Rescue team arrived. They went into the crevasse to bring Geoff up in a special rescue basket. It was a dangerous and difficult rescue.

Finally, ten hours after he fell, Geoff was safe in a hospital. He was there for three weeks. He had many injuries. Geoff was very lucky to be alive. Marc visited him every day. Geoff said, “I want to come back to Oregon next May. I still want to climb Mt. Hood.” Marc said, “Ok. I want to go with you, and the rescue team does, too!”
